We'd like to introduce you to the first in our installment of curious things that New York-based writer, poet, and wordsmith Enzo Scavone finds going to, being on, or coming from the subway in New York. Every week Enzo posts an item, picture, or video he finds or takes on the subway and also puts up a piece of creative writing to go along with it that is exactly 160 characters.

Being a subway dork myself, the nature of Enzo's creative writing appeals greatly to me. Think about it. When he gets on the subway each day he has no idea what he'll find, but he knows he'll find something. The excitement of exploration must make him almost child-like in terms of anticipation. Over the course of a year I'd say that the 52 moments he captures would tell quite a story about New York. The first one we're displaying above is called "Bent Joints." Look for a new post from Enzo each Monday here on The Wall Breakers and see
